

Not only is the proposed tracking of cell phone users a hideous invasion of privacy, it is not necessary. The FBI's own statistics indicate that violent crime has been steadily decreasing for most of this decade. The decrease was accomplished without violating the privacy of mostly law-abiding American citizens. Law enforcement has functioned well without this change in the law and will continue to do so.

I oppose the proposal.