

As I type this, I am worried about whether I could be retaliated against by the FBI in the future, for opposing location tracking for wireless phones. This and the other so-called communication "security" measures they propose go way beyond what was the original intent of Congress and the Constitution. This is the foundation for a completely monitored society. No one, yourself, your family or your country can be 100 per cent safe, and you don't have to emulate the former Soviet Union and other totalitarian states to achieve total safety via total control. There is too much power already centralized in Washington and the security apparatus. Think of the costs (not just monetary) of these Big Brother requests you are getting. Stop this never-ending grab for personal information and the death of privacy. Do you really think this is the last "request" you'll be getting for even more power over your personal lives. I recently worked with some Russian immigrants who escaped to this country, and when I informed them of what is going on in respect to this kind of power the FBI is asking of the FCC, they were afraid to get involved because they "didn't want to get involved in this". It's deja vu all over again, and the chilling power of a monitored society will have us all watching our words and looking over our shoulders. During the Cold War, a few months before military appropriations were due for a vote, there were convenient "submarine" sightings and scares in the Atlantic, and the frightened congresspeople opened their checkbooks. Are you going to fall for the same scarecrow boogeyman tactics?
