

Dear Sir/Madam:

Please drop the proposal to require that new cell phones have the capability for FBI tracking. The potential for abuse of such capability is overwhelming when one remembers the FBI's COINTELPRO Program of the 1960s. Over 300,000 law-abiding citizens were subjected to surveillance under this program. Clearly, if people can be tracked by cell phones, then any new COINTELPRO program would have serious consequences. The new motto of the new millennium is, "Just say 'No' to privacy invaders." Thank you for paying attention to my comments.
