

I am writing in support of the proposal for the creation of Low Power FM stations. For the last four years I have been involved in my university's (the University of Southern California) student run community radio (KSCR). Currently, we broadcast only on the internet, which I feel has estranged our station not only the university's students, but the surrounding community. We are no longer able to inform students and other community members of events unique to the USC area, as well as unable to link people together through music, talk, and news. If LPFM is technically feasible, then I believe that the establishment of such stations would greatly benefit not only this university and the people living around it, but local communities throughout the United States.
