The 1897 Sherman County Courthouse was built after an election set Moro as the county seat instead of rival Wasco.

Sherman County was created in 1889 out of the northeast corner of Wasco County. It was named for General William Tecumseh Sherman of Civil War fame. Sherman County is located in north central Oregon and is bounded by the Columbia River on the north, the John Day River and Gilliam County on the east, and the Deschutes River, Buck Hollow, and Wasco County on the west and south. The only change made to the county's borders occurred in 1891 when the Legislative Assembly moved the county line eighteen miles farther south. Sherman County contains 831 square miles.

The town of Wasco was designated the county seat by the Legislative Assembly although the selection was contested between Wasco and Moro. Moro benefited from the addition to the southern part of the county of a portion of Wasco County and was the eventual winner of a series of elections to select a county seat.

The county contracted in 1892 to build a vault and building on the main street of Moro for use as an interim courthouse. A permanent courthouse was built in 1897 on a hill overlooking the town and is still in use today.

The citizens of Sherman County have been served by a county court form of government ever since its creation. Administrative functions for Sherman County continue to be the responsibility of the county court consisting of the county judge and two commissioners. Other elected officials are the assessor, county clerk, district attorney, sheriff, and treasurer.

The county is served by Senate District 28, Representative District 59, and the Second Congressional District. The population of the county has remained fairly constant, in 1890 there were 1,792 residents and in 1997 there were 1900 residents.
