As a founder and officer of a nonprofit group that operates a Public Access TV channel, I fear that any Broadcast Flag system will needlessly interfere with our ability to broadcast programs for which we have permissions but not the technical capability to indicate that fact to transmission and receiving equipment.

In addition, I believe it is not within the FCC's mission to establish technical standards that strongly affect industries outside the communications area (e.g., computers, which would be strongly affected). If "market forces" are to rule in other areas, why not here?
