

I am absolutely thrilled with Indiana's No Call phone list. Prior to signing up I had three or four calls every day. During the last nine months I have had one call. It's great!!! Please don't do anything to lessen the effectiveness of Indiana's system. As for allowing companies I have had business with in the past to call me, I do not agree that they have this right. If I want to do business with them again I will contact them. If they have new information to give me they can mail it, or possibly even e-mail it. In summary, I simply do not want ANY unsolicited phone calls. I can freely choose to ignore or view at my leisure any other types of contact. But I feel that I must always answer my telephone. Therefore, these companies should have no right to interrupt my own time, in my own time, to give me an unsolicited message. I'd like to think that all Americans are savvy enough to investigate consumer possibilities on their own and not be subject to disruptive phone calls.

Please do not loosen restrictions on telemarketers, no matter what self serving arguments they come up with.
