

I understand the FCC is considering a proposal to preempt state Telephone Privacy laws in favor of adopting a lower national standard. I am against any proposal that would lessen Indiana's telephone Privacy law protections. The Indiana Telephone Privacy law has improved my time at home greatly. I am a stay-at home mother with 3 toddlers. My days are filled with enough activity and everytime I don't have to answer the phone from a soliciter while changing a diaper, giving a bath, making dinner, putting kids to sleep, etc. is a blessing. Indiana's law has been extremely effective. I used to receive 4 or 5 calls per day. I haven't received any calls since I put my name on the "Do Not Call" list. Having a telephone is a priviledge, not a right. I pay a monthly fee for this priviledge. It is for MY use and convenience, not for the benefit of companies out there who want to solicit my business by interrupting my homelife. Along those same lines, any company who disturbs me at home will not get my business for the simple fact that they have no respect for my privacy. Thank you for considering my comments.
