

I have had the experience of using internet services provided by the phone company. It was a disaster for me and for my husband, who have separate accounts. The service was inadequate, responses to service questions took forever and the software required to run the phone company ISP on our Mac computers caused incompatibilities and was slow. We lasted on the service for about one month, never got it to work properly. I design websites for several non-profit organizations and cannot afford an ISP that does not work perfectly. This is the voice of experience and from a user who averages 5 to 10 hours a day online.