

To whom it does concern. I live in Hawaii, in a heavily monopolized market. If you relax the rules that require incumbent local exchange carriers from having to share their networks with their competitors, I believe you will be hurting the State of Hawaii. As it is, Verizon owns the market, charging its rate for dsl in addition to every other isp's charge. Time Warner Cable and Verizon have complete control over broadband and lifting rules that allow for competition, will force people to live by these two companies costs. Deregulation will cause costs here to skyrocket, and only provide more money into the coffers of two of the largest monopolies in this state.

Please take this into consideration
