

My business depends on the independant ISPs. Please preserve them.

Thanks,

The Federal Communications Commission and Congress have proposed new rules that could put almost every ISP out of business in the next year, according to Bruce Kushnick, chairman of TeleTruth, an ISP advocacy organization. If they don't fight for their right to exist, independent ISPs soon will be replaced by huge cable television and telephone companies supported by misguided FCC regulations, according to Kushnick, who addressed an audience Friday at ISPCON, an annual gathering for Internet service providers.
