

Your attempt to limit ownership in media will devastate the possibility of honest and unbiased media coverage of national issues forever.

The idea that a very small and select (read that big contributors to the congress and executive) will provide balanced, honest, reasoned coverage of anything but special interests is unbelievable.

The attempt to railroad the consolidation of the broadcast media into the hands of a select few is only to be expected from a politic that is bought and paid for by the same big business that paid for the election of the present congress and executive (and it clearly backs up the charge of duplicitous control of regulations in order to continue the limitation of free expression and knowledgible interaction in national affairs).

Trying to force such regulation reform behind closed doors without open public debate runs counter to all precepts of constitutional and democratic government (not surprising given the current holder of executive power).

The clear bias on the part of most of the key government regulatory agencies towards support to any industry rich enough to buy favor within the government is clear in the FCC handling of this issue; a bias that ignores the needs and rights of the individual citizens of this country.
