

My internet cable service provider, Charter, is allowing sexually explicit email to reach my company's general email address amerwood@charter.net visible to all in the company. The mail is not even addressed to amerwood@charter.net but ereese@charter.net and sent from yo@aol.com. Charter is allowing it to be redirected to us. Charter says our company is responsible for filtering out ourself. That would mean that all workstations would have to be visited and a email block placed on any and all such future emails.
