

Broadcast Ownership by a concentration of huge corporate interests must be halted, not encouraged. Public interest must be served and it must be served fairly. Concentrating ownership into the hands of a fewer number of owners threatens freedom in America, indeed, it threatens democracy. Broadcasters must serve to provide unbiased information to the public; if a handful of huge corporations owns the majority of broadcast outlets, the information received by the public will have been censored by the owners, intentionally or unintentionally. The people have a right to full coverage of news and information and the broadcast media must provide it. This crucial decision has not received very much attention in the media, which serves to prove my point. If corporations are not favorable to certain news information -- if those corporations are aligned with a political party -- they may choose not to report on it.
