

Restricting and/or stopping the intrusion and invasion of privacy of unwanted phone calls is a past due and needed control by government. The next most needed item of intrusion and disturbing the peace of a home is the increase of decibels in advertising on television and radio (over what it is set at in the home) together with the increasingly flagrant light flashes in the ad's (and in the movie previews). It has gotten so bad that pets in the home which are afraid of lightening will run from the room and hide in a dark place thinking the bangs and flashes are lightening. Many times when the ad's come on we turn off the tv--so the advertisers defeat their purpose. Please give this serious consideration and if necessary have the population polled regarding it. Sincerely, Jerry M. Davis--a retired, 75 year old CPA who resents disturbing the peace in the home. The general public talks about this.
