

HP Wants to change the import quantity limitations. Yes, it is understandable that almost all of electronics manufactured occur outside of the United States. Testing new technologies does require enough new technology to be efficiently tested, and yes it does take promotion over the preceding few months to get your product to market. The importation of the "press-kit" is asking for more than I feel is needed. You don't send out new products until they are tested and working. The importation of new devices for promotion isn't needed for these press kits. Once a project is completed or passed its final testing why not send out some of the tested equipment out, it works and that is what a company would want to send out for promotion not have working products. We need to keep some of our jobs local and maybe this could possibly help to get some of the jobs back here in America.