

The FCC should not endorse a copy protection scheme for high-definition television. While providers are worried about digital copying, it's important to remember that very few people will trade television shows online. There's no point - it's not like there is a shortage of TV. Please disregard their requests for a mandatory broadcast flag. If they threaten to withhold programming, fine. The market niche will be filled by someone else who is more in tune with customer demands.