

Code is just a mode. Delete the testing requirement for CW, it no longer serves as a vital means of communications. Code is no longer monitored for emergencies. Code is no longer required for ships at sea. It is a firewall to young and bright operators that want to connect their computers, GPS, digital voice and other high tech devices and communicate over HF. Code is just a mode, leave it as that. If someone wants to send CW they will learn it otherwise it isn't needed. Which is evident with the decision this summer by the International community. Code can be fun, but it is just a mode, like psk-31, RTTY, and digital voice. Code is just a mode, and sess, I passed my code test.

Randy Moore