

After having a form of broadband internet from my cable company for at least 5 years, I would say that there is only one complaint. They way that the cable companies sell their internet service. There should be a standard advertised speed of internet connectivity. By not saying how fast I am guaranteed a speed with the service I am not able to decide on weather to buy a broadband service with either DSL or Cable. You should pay the price for the speed of service you get.