

Now I think you are pushing the edge. For a government agency to completely "black out" a show, as you call it, when I am paying for cable, has just completely become a burden. I can understand it if it is completely a public broadcast, however, I was watching one of my cable television shows and all of a sudden this screen pops up that says, "Pursuant to FCC Syndication Rules this program has been blocked out. We apologize for the inconvenience." This is completely uncalled for. I almost expect a reimbursement for my thirty minutes of television watching that you have so deprived me of. However, I know that this will never happen due to the fact that since you are a government agency, you feel you are above the people of the country. You have completely stopped listening to the people and started listening to what you want. This government is quickly becoming a tyranny. Government regulation is one thing, government parenting is completely uncalled for.