

When the FCC licensed the two satellite radio companies, in no way were these stipulations put on them.

Now that they have spent billions and are finally being taken serious we want to shut them down.

I am sorry that local radio wasn't prepared for this, but that is the casualty of business.

As a stock holder of both XMSR and SIRI, I find this move to be unfair and possibly illegal.

I know if this new rule is put into place that many people are going to look for compensation in the billions of dollars.

What you are thinking of doing to satellite radio is like telling CNN that they can't talk about news in California because they are a cable station and not a network.

Healthy competition is healthy competition. Local radio didn't care what the satellite companies did when the licenses were issued. Now that they are in fear of getting crushed, they want to cry foul.

Please don't block Satellite radio from growing. If you are going to censor radio then start with the local stations and some of their not funny vulgar humor. That should be higher on your list then preventing us from getting traffic and weather.
