

In general, captioning has improved substantially in the past years, although quality varies. The broadcast channels and major cable channels does an excellent job of captioning while the smaller cable channels doesn't do as well. However, there should be a fine for a channel airing an uncaptioned show/movie that IS available with captioning. A notorious example would be FX, which constantly airs episodes and movies that have already been captioned.