

Satellite radio services XM and Sirius were granted licenses based on their promise to be "national" broadcasters. Now they intend on encroaching on local broadcasters by requesting to offer local traffic and weather. By doing so, they go against the very promise they made in order to receive FCC licensing. If it is weather and traffic now, what might that become later? Please do not open Pandora's Box and allow these or any satellite broadcasters permission to renege on their promise. With their 100+ channels each, their potential competitive advantage could be a significant blow to true local radio.
