

Television Translators, LPTV's and Class A stations long have had the alternatives necessary to continue operation when faced with displacement. The ability to pick the best available channel has kept many of these stations operating. In fairness to FM translators, the same opportunities should be made available to those stations. Many FM translators have been forced to cease operations, not due to lack of a place in the spectrum to operate in, but due to inadequate specifications in the Commission's Rules allowing those stations to seek an operable channel.

It's time to level the playing field.
