

I filed a comment earlier. However I was rude and my comments were not well thought out. I'd like to temper my earlier comments with the following; For what ever reason we have moved far away from the concept of an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. The mandatory recording is just one more example of the FCC not helping broadcasters to better serve their community. It is the pound of cure that will cure nothing. The sole purpose would be to punish an offender. Why not develop a program that encourages broadcasters to respect the public. The mandatory recording would not eliminate obscenity on the air it really won't do much to curb it. It just creates an easier method for the FCC to punish a broadcaster financially. Will that make a better broadcaster. Hell no! It seems that everyone would benefit from a platform of how to be better at broadcasting. Not one of "who is the best lawyer". I enjoy being a broadcaster. My father was one in the 50's. He was very proud of himself when he got his 1st class ticket. My father had great respect for the FCC.
