

While I believe firmly in the right to free speech - including the right of media corporations to air what they are willing to pay for, I also believe that even the potential for a true democracy relies on a responsible and accountable press. Sinclair's decision to be strongly partisan when they have clear dominance in many media areas is irresponsible and - as a democracy - an act which should be censored at minimum and prosecuted to any extent the law allows.

I honestly don't know what the answer is, and I have thought about these issues for several years. However I do know that any acceptable answer must keep the press responsible to the American people and decidedly non-partisan. History is full of examples in which a politicized press is disastrous for personal freedom and liberty of thought.
