

Too much violence??? FUCK NO! The problem isn't with the violence on television, or movies, or video games. It's not even with the foul language, the sex, or anything else those uptight moralists whores bitch and complain and whine about. It's not the exposure that matters, it's how the exposure is handled. I don't recall these parents ever teaching their kids "Now Timmy, what you see on television with the violence is make believe and not how you should act in real life" like my parents did. I'm exposed to violent content over and over and over, and I'm not a violent person. I'm a video gamer, I'm a computer gamer, I'm by what all rights according to those moralists should be a mass murdering psychopath. Gee, maybe I'm not because MY PARENTS didn't spend their time whining about what I was exposed to and instead explaining it to me so that I could comprehend it and understand it. They're going to be exposed to sex, they're going to be exposed to violence. Keeping them ignorant of it will only make matters worse down the road. Maybe if parents weren't such bitches and spent time with their kids then things would get better. If/When I have kids, you can bet I'll monitor what they watch and when they encounter something of that nature I'll be right there to explain to them how drugs are bad, how violence should never be used except to protect yourself and others, and how sex shouldn't be casual and taken lightly. Gee, I'm a moral upright citizen and I've probably blown up a million bad guys on my computer. Guess you all need to pull the steel pole out of your ass and get a clue.