

Voom is currently carrying more high definition programming than Echostar and Directv combined. Echostar has not made significant strides towards HDTV programming and must not be allowed to acquire another satellite, thereby controlling more public airspace, unless the intention of doing so is to increase national HDTV programming in order comply with the FCC mandate that all transmissions be high definition by 2006.