

I would first like to say that I am currently not a Voom customer, but am considering their service very seriously. In my humble opinion they are the only provider, both satellite and cable combined, to push the HD envelope, where no one else has. I feel that in the best interest to consumers, especially those who are investing in HDTV's, that we make sure the Voom LLC is allowed to keep those licenses and Rainbow 1 at the 61.5 location. Its not to say that Echostar wouldn't make good use of Rainbow 1 and those licenses, but from my research its more likely that Voom will add more HD content and services faster than Echostar will. We all want competition in the marketplace and I feel in order to carry this out, Voom LLC should be allowed to keep their current licenses and Rainbow 1 Satellite at the 61.5 degree location.
