

This government agency has no reason to interfere with digital pay-for-service programming. Could you perhaps suggest that people monitor what they are watching and listening to? Are you such fools to think that the FCC needs to regulate programming? If one person out of a million is offended, why is that an issue? You can't please every body all the time. I'm offended that this agency has ruined everything that is entertaining. Satellite radio is the only thing worth listening to now. Stay out of it. Since I'm offended that the FCC would even consider policing these kind of transmissions, does that mean that I should expect a check from the FCC for fines? Please send it in cash - I don't trust a government check.
