

I am adamantly opposed to phones on airplanes. I do not know how they would affect communications, but they would be a huge annoyance to passengers. There are just too many abnoxious and rude people that would spend a lot of time on these phones. It is bad enough that people are allowed to use the phone up to take-off. What is it about our life style today that we cannot stay off the phone during a flight. I would be very upset if this is allowed. I do not want the person next to me constantly talking on the phone. People raise their voices when talking on the cell phone in a crowd and it would be worse on a plane. Imagine 20 to 30 people talking at the same time, and this is a reality. I find it very difficult to understand why our federal government is even considering such an asinine thing. Are the cell phone lobbyists and their money more important than common sense? This is stupid. Period. If it becomes a reality this is proof of how little the common person is heard and how money controls congress.
