

As a very frequent business flyer I would encourage you not to allow this change. There are just too many rude, loud and obnoxious cell phone users out there. To allow this to happen in the close confines of an airplane would be an unwarranted intrusion on the peace and quiet of other travelers on the plane. I would see cell phone usage as annoying as when smoking was allowed on the planes. We have done so much to help make the travel experience less stressful and less un-healthy and to inflict cell phone usage by the above mentioned individuals on other passengers would be a big step backwards. If cell phones are allowed, we should seriously think about bringing back split cabins and putting the cell phone users together in the back of the plane were they can annoy each other and not the rest of the passengers. (Another option would be to give them seats in the luggage compartment). Thank you.
