

I believe Indiana's law is unnecessarily prohibitive. If I have an account with a business and they call me, all I need to do is ask them to stop if I wish them to, and they must comply by law. There are some businesses I would like to be able to call w/special deals. I'm also worried about the economic impact of Telemarketing employees losing jobs on a grand scale. Lastly, I can understand the burden this places on businesses who rely on telemarketing to make changes to policies, procedures, and systems - especially when those changes are state specific. Instead of providing the consumers with better services, they are spending their time and resources on being compliant - possibly with many state laws as well as federal.
