

I am currently a resident of Indiana and thoroughly enjoy being a part of the "Do Not Call" list. I recently become aware that this wonderful piece of legislation is under attack by the CBA.

Telemarketing is obviously a real nuisance to the general public.

There are several consumer products aimed curtailing this nuisance.

The proper course of action for the FCC would be to completely outlaw unsolicited telemarketing. I am confident that this would satisfy the vast majority of Americans. At the very least, the FCC should not allow the Indiana Do Not Call directive to be repealed.

The FCC and all other government agencies should always keep the best interest of the general public at heart and not waver from that...failure to do so would be a violation of the trust of the American people.
