

I resent the telemarketing phone calls. They intrude on my privacy and on my time. I like the way Indiana's laws regulate telemarketing and I resent groups petitioning to overturn these laws. I especially resent the federal government's considering laws to prevent states from regulating this industry.

When telemarketing first began there were individuals who bought police whistles and blew them loudly when a telemarketer called. I am told this damaged the worker's hearing. I fear that any increase in such calls would encourage a citizen's revolt and a return to this practice. I would not want to see the workers put at risk in this way.
