

Indiana's "no call" law has been exceptional when coming to telemarketing. The piece of mind my family has enjoyed by not having our limited quality time interrupted by unwanted calls is a great step in keeping the family united and enjoying private, uninterrupted conversations (which everyone will agree is needed). The FCC must first protect us (the consumer) before telemarketers. I feel that this is an invasion to our privacy. Harrasment is the word that first comes to mind. If I make continued unwanted advances at my job, I'd be fired. These companies are rewarded. Please do not weaken these laws.
