

I believe that the morse code requirement is outdated and is preventing positive growth in the amateur radio hobby. As a ham operator myself (W9RYH), I think eliminating the code requirements would be a great way to recruit new people to the hobby. I do however think the code requirement should remain at 5WPM for the Extra class license. If you want the top license then you should need to pass the code test. All other license classes should have their code requirements lifted to encourage new ham operators. Thanks you for providing the opportunity to express my comment.