

Morse Code is an alternative mode of communication when voice did not have enough quality to reach the listener. A simple combination of beeps determined each letter.

Now Morse Code is becoming an old alternative, but there are new ones other than Morse Code even though far more technical. Maybe the requirement of Morse Code should be replaced with the requirement that the operator knows and can use one alternative form of communication such as Morse Code or any of the digital-type transmission.

This change in requirements may help fuel the usage of other forms of communication other than voice and may help develop new ones.