

I have been trying to learn Morse Code since I was 13, I am now 41. The old saying "some people just don't get it" is true, I did not get it. If that makes me, who at 41 is an EX-Electronics Engineer, EX-business owner and a current wealthy Purchasing Manager for a multi-million dollar electronics company dumb, so be it. I have been working HF for years with MARS, never needed code, not as long as I have Amtor and Pactor, which works when I can't even here the signal on my receiver. It is about time that the Morse code requirement went away. I still drive my 58' Chevy with power nothing when I want, most of the new extra's could not even figure out how to start it let alone the "3 on the tree" with overdrive. Maybe we should make people drive model A's to pass their driving test. Drop the requirement, but by all means, don't quit using the code if you know how to use it. Best regards,
