

As an administrator of a wireless community network in an impoverished area of Southern Illinois I know how important it is that we allocate spectrum to the public. Many of my users would not be able to afford Internet access if it were not for our network. 802.11 and other publicly allocated frequency ranges are getting quite crowded. It is imperative that we have new spectrums available for public access. I am proud of the FCC's decision to open 3650-3700MHz for public use. I and others would be very disappointed to see the FCC give in to the pressures of corporations seeking to sieze this band from the American people. Thank you for your support of public access to the airwaves.
