

The FCC has rendered several important decisions recently that are inimical to the long-term interests of the individual citizen, in favor of corporate control of our communications and information channels. Please maintain your resolve to make the allocated frequencies available for community use in enhanced networking.

Wireless "hot spots", especially freely available ones, are transforming our society and are assisting in creating efficiencies in business. Bandwidth is obviously a limiting factor in providing these benefits, and the additional spectrum that you have allocated is an extremely important aspect of these services, which will also help to insure that we do not fall even further behind other countries in providing a truly useful infrastructure that is open to innovation at the grass-roots level.

Thank you for your existing decision and for the opportunity to comment.

K. W. Meyer