

This comment is to support Continental Airlines in their quest to provide free wi-fi in their President's club. Most airports have a system that you log onto and are required to pay. Usually the minimum amount is approximately $10. This is an excessive amount since travelers usually only have 30 minutes between flights. Airports should be required to provide free internet access (Tampa International does) and then there would be no problem with Continental service. I will certainly avoid those airports that charge for internet access. I will avoid, and so should others, those airports that prevent or discourage travelers from gaining internet access.
