

Please revamp the current license process to exclude Morse Code. The fears that the hobby will be overrun by "Chicken Banders" is a ridiculous fear. There are enough regulations in place to hold any errant Ham radio hobbyist accountable, as long as the FCC backs up any legitimate complaint and prosecutes violations of FCC rules.

Currently, statistics from the ARRL show that the average age of Ham radio operators is over 50, and the hobby is dying. Either revamp the old requirements to bring in new blood or shut down the hobby completely and give the BPL guys the go ahead.
