

Local communities must be given the ability to negotiate substantial agreements with local cable providers (and increasingly telecommunications providers that are entering the video market) for significant set-asides for community media, as well as funding to create new programming that serves local interests.