Re: Unlicensed Operation in the TV Broadcast Bands

I am a wireless internet service provider (“WISP” in central Oklahoma, focusing on providing broadband internet access in areas not covered by cable modem or DSL service. The WISP industry has grown, despite the availability of adequate bandwidth to fulfill the demand for our services. The FCC is considering converting certain frequencies currently allocated for TV broadcast usage to unlicensed usage. This conversion would be of great benefit to WISPs and the millions of customers they service. This spectrum is much more conducive to providing internet access than the currently available unlicensed spectrums. More, better and less expensive services could be provided to customers if this spectrum were made available.

I therefore urge you to move forward with the conversion of the frequencies to unlicensed usage.
