

Although I consider myself a "progressive," I am appalled by the amount of gratuitous violence on television, both during prime time and outside that period, on network and on cable. Since the myriad companies involved in the production and distribution of television programming do not have the will to restrain themselves in this regard, I wholeheartedly support FCC regulations which do restrict violent programming.

I also support FCC regulations which restrict the amount of sex on television, as well as advertising for ED, tampons, and any other products of this type that one wouldn't discuss with strangers or casual acquaintances.

Thank you,
