

The Amateur Radio community in recent years has become more a group of appliance operators than technically competent radio operators. Most of those currently taking license tests do so by simply memorizing the answers rather than learning the rules and technology. Eliminating the Morse Code requirement will only serve to further reduce the technical competence of Amateur Radio licensees.