

Filing in opposition to 11306

Without the knowledge and experimentation of am transmission it would have been impossible to develop other modes of radio transmission. Today's am operator continues with experimentation and refinement of equipment.

The numbers of am operators is growing by leaps and bounds, it is evident that the mode serves to gather more operators to the hobby. I oppose any idea that am transmission should be an exception to any band plan that centers on other modes, some of which have not even been developed as yet. Am transmission should continue to be included as part of any band plan with its transmission methods and bandwidth.

Robert Brubaker w8ath