

Violence on TV shouldn't be as restricted for children because its impact on them have not been convincingly proven. In my opinion its impact on children isn't as harmful as many make it out to be. Adults and experts often place their ideals of what they believe children to be, always associating them with the pure and innocent while not giving enough credit to their mental and emotional capabilities. Often, the rhetoric of protecting the young and impressionable minds of children is exploited to further place more censors on television viewing.
