

I am beening killed by all the junk faxes I receive. I must get 30 a week. I spend so much money on buying ink cartridges. I am surprised to read about the Junk Fax Protection Act. Since the FCC has not come out with a ruling on what is an established business relationship, I have received 3 times the amount since that law was passed. Before, under no circumstance no one could send me a junk fax, maybe I received 1-2 a week. After that law went into effect, I get 25-30 a week. On every web site they are advertising fax services where you can blast your own faxes. I just coming out with what an established business relationship would clear up and make junk faxers understand they can't send me faxes if I don't have an ebr. There is such a loophole in the Junk Protection Act. Why is the FCC always postponing a ruling on an definition of what an 'ebr' is?
